Keywords: Arab Spring, fragmentation, regional trade, private sector, protectionism.
Abstract: Paraphrase: 'the roots of the region's long-term economic failure is a statist model of development that is financed through external windfalls and rests on inefficient forms of intervention and redistribution. cost of repression and redistribution - long-term sustainability of this model. singular failure of the Arab world is that it has been unable to develop a private sector that is independent, competitive and integrated with global markets. both a political and regional challenge ... private sector - independent of state controlled rent streams can pose a political threat 'overcoming regional economic barriers constitutes the single most important collective action problem that the region has faced since the fall of the Ottoman empire

Title: Kicking Away the Ladder

Short Title: Kicking Away the Ladder

Notes: Policies for Economic Development; protectionism of the original NDCs (note the use of industrial espionage, corruption, bribery, at will an at state behest, until the 'modern period'; development of institutions, suffragcy, intellectual property acts, note to self - US forcing acceptance of WTO TRIPS in places like Jordan, particularly in the pharmaceutical market, marketed through the mechanism of saying it will assist the domestic (Jordanian) market, knowing damn well that it was actually a US trade protectionism measure.

Note: period of acclimitasation (my usage) vs adoption of institutions - old world countries trying to force rapid adoption of insitutions (patent office, standards etc) when these took decades in the 'first world'.
